❖ What the Honours Review looks for:

- Articles by students for students that can share information that is:
 - Multidisciplinary
 - Exciting
 - Funded in systematic (scientific method) research
 - Open-minded
 - Original (own initiative)
- An article can come from class work (e.g. an essay), or from your own inspiration due to something you read, heard or witnessed. In both cases, research must be done into the topic to ensure that all the information is reliable and accurate, and also that it is in accordance with the latest advances in that particular topic.
- For details of the writing process, please refer to the Writing Instructions document and the Reviewing Process document.
- All published articles meet certain scientific standards, as guaranteed by the editorial board and a thorough peer-review process. The reviewing process is outlined in the Reviewing Process document.

❖ Final remarks:

- Sending your article means you give permission to the Editorial Board of the Honours Review to publish it. However, if a teacher recommends your work, you will be asked for permission before publication.
- You will receive instructions on every step of the way and aid to any questions or comments you make.

We can guide you into being a published author; so don't hesitate to contact us with your innovative and creative ideas at articles@honoursreview.nl
